GS US TMT: … Internet ..

Sheridan/GIR with his latest "Where to from here?" note highlighting key debates & topics in focus (link here / note below) ..

…. in terms of stocks, Sheridan/GIR highlights AMZN / DASH / UBER / META / SPOT / GOOGL as Large Cap Buy-rated stocks where he is positive coming out of earnings and also points to an attractive risk-reward skew in RBLX and CART

The note includes a deep dive on Cloud Computing after total 2026 & 2027 capex estimates for AMZN & GOOGL have increased by ~$237bn since the beginning of the year -- on the back of this, GIR frames an upside case that implies a forward 4-year revenue growth CAGR of ~31% for AWS and ~45% for Google Cloud (…. well above GIR's current estimates of ~23% and ~34%, respectively).

Sentiment check .. desk views here … Most loved: GOOGL (.. and, I suppose SPOT and META are nearly on this list too ..) …. Liked, but plenty of controversy: DASH, AMZN, TTWO, CVNA, SE, CPNG, Wayfair, CHWY, EBAY ….. Highly debated: NFLX, UBER, CART, ABNB, RBLX, RDDT, Unity, APP ……. Out of Favor: EXPE, BKNG, PINS, DUOL, TTD, SNAP, MTCH, STUB, ETSY

Debates .. desk view on top inbounds / most topical …. META: feedback on reports of potential 'Avocado' delays (link) and layoffs (link) … is there a real bear case on DASH? … what's the SPOT v NFLX view from here? .. can RBLX work or is 2026 just a 'tough' year given tough comps .. why so little interest in Ad names ex-META / GOOGL? .. anyone kicking tires on these cheap(ish), ~52wk low types (LYFT, CART, PINS, BKNG, UBER, etc) ..

Narratives: what is the Internet narrative YTD? .. via Eric/GIR recap note (link): .. "the majority of our coverage has been debated and analyzed through three separate prisms YTD: a) the companies allocating the scaled capital at infrastructure and the return profile; b) the companies who are perceived as most at risk to disruption/disintermediation (long-tailed advertising and eCommerce, online travel, mobility networks); & c) the companies that remain heavily debated as to their potential resilience to such potential disruption (scaled platforms with direct customer relationships at scale, delivery platforms, media/gaming content and the content distribution networks).

Early 1Q checks from Sheridan / GIR (link) .. "our early work would point to overall consumer trends that are relatively stable (albeit adjusted for sequential seasonal impacts) and enterprise/AI cloud computing trends which are tracking solidly above current expectations (as discussed herein) with a few key nuances:

- Digital advertising trends have been impacted by a handful of budget dynamics: a) a continued upward trajectory in direct response and measurable advertising outcomes; b) continued restraint in brand adverting budgets (which may become a more extended theme if geopolitical risks sustain/escalate from current levels); c) continued industry testing/scaling around emerging platforms across streaming media and agentic commerce (broadly defined) as rising pathways to reach advertising goals and stimulate consumer demand.

- eCommerce trends are stable & roughly in line with company forward projections overall as companies generally painted a constructive framework that sustains /builds on trends seen in Q4 reporting.

- Online travel trends remain solid overall as the industry faces the prospect of outside demand from a series of special global events (Olympics, World Cup) in 2026 while companies remain focused on two key themes: building a deeper relationship directly with consumers & widening out their offerings in terms of local services/experiences.

- The mobility and delivery platforms continue to see solid/strong demand trends with affordability measures & widening array of local commerce initiatives positively impacting user and frequency growth.

- Overall trends in the consumer digital media landscape remain strong with platforms having absorbed recent quarterly moves on consumer price with little impact on forward operating trends." – GIR.

Cloud Dreams…. dreaming the dream on the AI driven Cloud upside via GOOG + AMZN backlog conversion scenario analyses

(esp as QTD datapoints point toward Cloud revs performance at both AWS and Google Cloud solidly above current Street estimates, per GIR) .. Eric/GIR presents (link) a scenario analysis of the potential upside case for forward cloud revenue growth as capacity comes online and current backlogs are converted into revenues. On the back of a series of inputs and assumptions made in the analysis, GIR frames an upside case that implies a forward 4-year revenue growth CAGR of ~31% for AWS and ~45% for Google Cloud (well above GIR's current estimates of ~23% and ~34%, respectively) – can see below, but, this 'blue sky' framework points to the potential for >30%+ upside to ests in 2027-2029 on AWS revenues … .. further, despite increasing D&A expenses, GIR forecasts stable to rising incremental margins for AWS (AMZN) & Google Cloud (GOOGL) in forward years as scaling revenues against modest (~LDD %) non-D&A opex growth offset these headwinds

Stocks ... key themes / debates among Eric/GIR's Buy rated stocks – from GIR's note (link):

1. AMZN – The primary debate around the company remains centered on the company's forward capex guidance and its potential implications for backlog/revenue growth inside its AWS operating segment, its resulting impact on the company's free cash flow generation capability and how any such revenue tailwinds might drive segment operating income margins. As discussed in this note, we now see a clearer path to both AWS revenue reacceleration & sustained higher levels of revenue growth across multiple years. We still see upside to Street estimates across the collection of Amazon businesses in the next 12-18 months.

2. DASH – The company continues to execute against its broader local commerce strategy with management highlighting growing user engagement, strengthening platform economics, and evolving consumer behavior leading to continued outperformance from a topline perspective. Further details about its forward investments (pace, cadence) caused outsized volatility both into and out of the most recent earnings report. We see the potential for outsized platform compounding dynamics in years ahead (volumes, revenue & gross profits) on the back of those efforts.

3. UBER – Demand across Mobility & Delivery remained very solid exiting 2025 and 2026 looks to be a year with the scope for continued success in scaling its delivery segment results. Investor debates largely remain anchored on the scope for physical AI (in the form of autonomous vehicles) to disrupt both the demand aggregation and supply side of their mobility business. We continue to see UBER's strategy of partnering, investing and aligning their platform's go to market position and capital allocation possibilities to widen out its own exposure to that theme remains underappreciated by investors.

4. META – The primary debate around the company remains anchored on any forward visibility into a return profile and platform/product initiatives around the AI initiatives and spatial computing. In the company's core Family of Apps business, we view the recent positive Q1 2026 revenue guide as indicative of rising factors around the application of additional compute and product innovation to drive tailwinds for engagement and ad monetization in the forward periods.

5. SPOT – The company exited 2025 with strong operating momentum, achieving record profitability and healthy user growth. In our view, the platform is positioned as a net beneficiary of AI-generated content when measured against its content distribution scale – a view that runs counter to most investor fears/debates. We look toward the company's Investor Day in May as a potential catalyst against this theme.

6. GOOGL – Alphabet has transitioned from questions about the company's standing against the AI theme to much more universal positive sentiment in the past ~9 months. Against that backdrop, we also see Alphabet as positively exposed to multiple aspects of the AI theme scaling in the coming years across both consumer and enterprise computing. In addition, we see the mgmt team as remaining focused on striking a balance between growth investments and balance across operational efficiencies.
